

Partners in Learning

"We could not have done it without help from . . . " Every successful effort involves people supporting people. Every new effort begins by putting together a team. All team members have mutually supporting goals.

The DOE Corporate Technology-Supported Learning (TSL), Partnering Team is looking for examples of training, education, technology and other partnerships that have worked for others. A lot is going on that could benefit all of us; partnerships with other work groups, local community colleges, labor unions, corporations, and state and local governments. Partnerships exist between the Department and other Federal government agencies, contractors, and foreign countries. We want to learn about these experiences and share lessons-learned, successes, and near-successes so that we can inspire others to partner.

So, partner with us: what did you experience, see, or hear that others can learn from? What partnerships extended beyond your own work group and how were they put together? What resources did each partner bring to the effort and what was the pay-back?

Our team is chartered to develop partnerships in technology-supported learning. In the process, we expect to put together a process for facilitating partnering that can benefit any program. Is it people working together providing resources to achieve a common objective? Yes, that's partnering!

Send your information to Heidi Coblenz, DOE-DP, e-mail Heidi.Coblenz@dp.doe.gov, phone at 301-903-2485, or mail to DOE Defense Programs, DP-13, Germantown, MD 20874. Thanks, partner.
